

Workshop

Looking for Canadian Context as it relates to LEED v4? Join us and gain a solid grasp of LEED v4 changes and the positive impacts this will have on current green building practices in Canada.

Upon completion of this course, participants will be able to:

- » Define LEED v4 system goals and the connection to credit requirements.
- » Identify key improvements in LEED v4 from previous versions of LEED.
- » Identify how LEED v4 is a flexible rating system to meet global and market needs.
- » Define the importance of the integrative process to success in LEED v4.
- » Recognize the value of performance-based requirements in LEED v4 credits.

Introduction to the Changes in LEED® v4

DURATION: 3.5 HOURS (approved for GBCI CE hours)

Course Highlights

This half day workshop will cover the changes in LEED® v4 from previous versions and will discuss how the new rating system will improve current green building practices in Canada. During the workshop, we will discuss the flexibility in LEED v4 and its applicability to an expanded range of building types. We will also explore common themes in the new rating system, synergies within the system, and the new performance requirements. You will also learn about the new integrative process credit as well as the enhanced LEED v4 systems goals and their impact on LEED point allocation. After this workshop, you should be able to communicate effectively to colleagues and clients about some of the major changes occurring in LEED v4.

Please note that this course is not a technical review course (it does not delve into each credit of the rating system).

Audience

This course will be of interest to architects, engineers, interior designers, landscape architects, municipal officials, product manufacturers, real estate professionals, students and other professionals who have worked with previous versions of the LEED rating systems, and those who are new to LEED.
